“RIP Bob! You were our friend; I'm so glad that you were able to be a part of our family the last few years of your life. You always helped us out tremendously around the house; when something needed to be done, you always volunteered to do it without being asked. I'm glad that you are finally free from the pain that you had to endure these last several months. Tiffany, KD, and I sat around last night and talked about all the good times that we had; we are thankful and grateful that you were a part of our lives. You will be greatly missed each day. I hope that maybe you will get to spend some time with Taz for a little while, I know he was your best buddy and wherever you are maybe he is there as well; you two always seemed to be tied at the hip and he wasn't really the same after you had to go to the nursing home. I hope that wherever you are that he is with you. You'll be missed my friend. It's one of the great things about the human experience, someone that had so little; can leave such an undeniable and profound impact on those left behind. There's a lesson there, we bring nothing into this world and we can be certain that we take nothing from this world -- but each of us in our own way leaves something here, we each leave a legacy. Your legacy will be that you struggled with life, each day was a battle. But with each battle, you tried to overcome, you were always good to others, you always helped others, and you were always thankful for the things you had. You would tell me daily "there is always someone, somewhere, who has it far worse than me"

In Bob's story there's a lesson to be learned for everyone. Be kind to others who are less fortunate, be less judgmental of others -- sometimes it is incomprehensible for us to understand what someone is dealing with day in and day out. All human life is precious because it comes from above, be kind and gentle to one another.... one day it may just be you that needs the support of others.

Rest in Peace Bob! You'll always be a part of our family!! We love you and will miss you!!
