“ Paul coached my girls in soccer. He gave one of them the nick name "Half Pint". One time we saw him at Wal-Mart and he spoke to her and hugged her as he always did. When we got home she told her dad we saw her coach... the one who called her half quart. From then on she was half quart... not "Half pint". He always took time for children. Especially his own. He loved them more than anything.

“ Paul and I go way back. We played against each other in soccer. We won't mention that he was 33 when I was 18. A 15 year age difference, but that never stopped Paul. Paul always jumped into scrimmages when we didn't have enough to play. Paul loved everyone and everything he did. I never once saw this man in a bad mood. I knew he got heated at times, but only because he cared and loved people and everything so much. I will never think of Paul as weak, I can still remember the time he pushed me/ran me over in soccer and I got a mouth full of dirt. I remember this because the next thing he did was Paul stopped and held out his hand, told me he was sorry. He then called me a muffin and encouraged me he was just toughing me up. He made me a better soccer player and I went on to college because he challenged me. He even continues to challenge me. He was a good man. Always there for anyone who needed him. He was a warrior. He had everything a man would want to be in this life. The greatest was he had Jesus. Paul showed it, during the annual Christmas Parade Paul knew everyone (or everyone knew Paul). He would yell and people would dump candy. Paul loved so dearly and so much. If the world was more like him, this world would be a great and wonderful place. The people loved Paul, because his joy, kindness, love was so good. He never met a stranger. Now during the Christmas Parades...he might have fought me over a laffy taffy... but I wasn't going to fight him. He loved them way to much. I also loved the challenge. Paul you will live on in my heart for the years to come. I know your missed but your not forgotten. I will see you again to brother. Save me a spot on your team.
